Disorganised drop.

FANMADE SCENARIO

June 6th, 1944, close to Hiesville…
At dawn on D-Day, after the jumbled para drop from the night before, confusion reigns supreme. Paratroops are scattered everywhere. Lt Colonel Robert Strayer has managed to gather small groups of men from 502nd, 506th and 508th parachute regiments. He proceeds to accomplish his mission : to clear the southernmost exit of Utah Beach. As the sun is rising he moves the makeshift unit towards the coast. Within minutes they encounter Germans…

Set up :
Both players place their units simultaneously.
Place a screen on the board to conceal locations of units until all troops are deployed.

The Cards :
Remove from,
both decks
all Artillery and Aviation
Both players draw 4 cards.

Victory Conditions and Particular Information :
US player has initiative.
American player wins if three para units can be evacuated through the North side of the board.

Requirements :
Core Box
News # 3

Paratroops of 101st Airborne inspecting a glider plane, 1944.
US Army Signal Corps /
US Army Military History Institute /
Photo Courtesy of U.S. Army

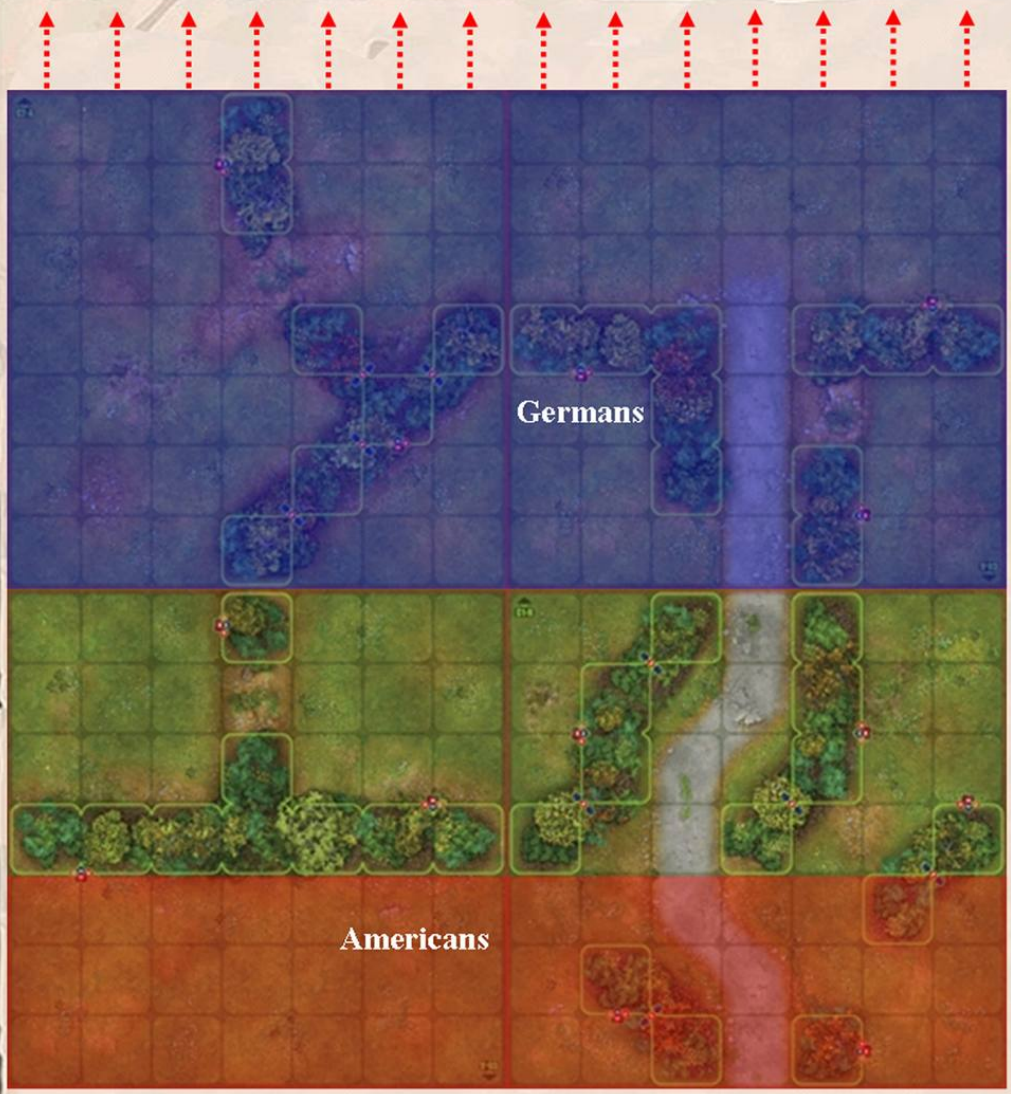

Composition of the armies :

Map tiles :
C-2A C-4A
C-6A C-1B

Epilogue :

The Germans, in spite of also being dispersed and befuddled, respond quickly.
Even though the paratroops make it through enemy lines they are slowed down significantly.
By midday they are still far North of their objective.
When Strayer finally reaches the route he had to clear, he finds it already taken by men of the 4th division.
Even though he, and others, didn't pull off their assignment, the paratroops did force the Germans to redirect troops from the beaches to go and face them inland in several confused skirmishes.

506th PIR Patch.