MULTIPLAYERS RULES 3-4 PLAYERS

Version 1.0b - June 2014

It is necessary to have at least one copy of Army Box (sold separately) in addition to the core box to use these rules. The material included in the Army Box is required.

Victory conditions

The defeat of a player from an alliance does not mean the end of the game, or the loss of it for the alliance in question.

Army Creation

After defining the number of army points per alliance, each player must purchase at least one recruitment tile that providing one or more units. The number of army points available per player is the number of Army point of the alliance divided by the number of players.

Recruitment of a high command tile

The alliance has the option to buy 1 single high command recruitment tile (recruitment tiles having only location for orders and no unit). The army which recruitment tile belonged indicates which Action cards deck must be used.

The total cost of the high command tile and selected options is divided between the players of the alliance as they wish, the shares are not necessarily equal.

The recruitment options of high command tile can be used by all players.
For recruitment options involving markers or tokens (example: Battle Plan, Hidden), place markers corresponding to the armies of the alliance above. This does not increase the amount of marker of the recruitment option. The token or marker is not permanently assigned to the option, it may be taken over by its player if necessary, following an external effect as an Action card.

Example: The alliance of British and American acquired the recruitment option Planning. One Order token is awarded to the alliance and not one for each player. By cons, each player places one of their Order tokens on the recruitment option. Each round, the Ordre token is assigned to one player of the alliance, so he takes his Order token and rested it on the recruitment option in Supply Phase. If another player of the alliance needs his Order token following a Tactician Action card played, he can take it, even if it was his 10th token, but it can not have more than 10 Order token.

Recruitment options related to high command recruitment tile must follow the colored bands present on the sides of the opening of the option. There can not be any US recruitment option on a Commonwealth high command recruitment tile, even if a player of the alliance has US units.

Action Cards

Each alliance prepares a deck of 50 cards instead of 40. Without high command recruitment tile, players belonging to the alliance must choose the deck of card with which they play. One of the players of the alliance must belong to this army.

Initiative and order of play

The Initiative marker is placed, the face corresponding to the alliance / player that will start up.

During the preparation of the game, then in the begining of each Orders Phase, players belonging to an alliance must decide in which order they will play in this alliance within the turn.

Deployment

Each player deploys his army based on the initiative and the order of play within the alliance.
The first player of the alliance with the initiative must deploy their troops, then the first player from the opposite alliance will deploy, then the second player of the alliance with the initiative will continue, etc.

Activation Phase

In Activations Phase, players activate their units in the order defined previously and alternately with their opponent(s).
A unit can not assault or fire on an allied unit spaces.

Movement

Units of a player can pass through squares occupied by infantry units belonging to an allied player, respecting the rules of the Movement.

Supply Phase

Players can move all their non activated units, keeping the order defined previously.

Action Cards

The number of drawed Action cards in Supply Phase is based on the number of players belonging to the alliance:
- 1 Player: 6 cards
- 2 players: 3 cards each
- 3 players 2 cards each

Allied players can show their Action cards to each others allied players. They can exchange Action cards only during the Supply Phase. Action cards are assigned for the next round.
They can play cards against an opponent (Mine Action card, etc..). They cannot play a card granting a bonus in any form whatsoever on units belonging to their teammate(s) (Battle Rage Action card, Burst into action Action card, Panzerfaust Action card, etc.).

Precision Special Ability

Any Special Ability that effect other units (eg Barrage order) can also be applied to allied units, in agreement with its owner.
Similarly, any Special Ability that requires the presence or the LoS of other units (Substitute, Artillery spotter, etc.) may use on an allied unit, in agreement with its owner.

2 versus 1 and 3 versus 1 game

The number of Order tokens, Special Order tokens and Bluff tokens is limited respectively to 10, 2 and 2 per ALLIANCE, which means that there is only one Bluff token without any suitable recruitment option. The single player follows the same limits as during a 1 versus 1 game.

For cons, the single player activates two units alternatively with his opponents.
For example, if he has the initiative, he activates his Order 1, the first opponent his own, then he activates his Order 2, his second opponent activates his Order 1 and so on.

During deployment, the single player deploys his entire army when his turn comes.
